on Blount. Butcher also has an official title to go with his Government salary—"Special Assistant to the Postmaster General."

A Post Office spokesman explained that Butcher delivers official messages from the Postmaster General to mem-bers of Congress. Members who have met Butcher, however, recall that he was wearing a white coat and was serving them filet mignon in the Postmaster General's private dining room.

In addition to his butler du-ties, Butcher also serves as Blount's cook, valet and handy-man. He broils the steaks to order in the Postmaster Gen-eral's private kitchen.

As the Nation's postal pan-jandrum, Blount has inherited the most grandiose officekitchen-dining complex in Washington. Designed by big Jim Farley, few grand ballrooms can compare with it for size and splendor.
